COMMENTATOR SEES OAS PLAN AS DELAYING TACTIC

("A Dangerous Experiment," by columnist /Bopiti--phonetic/)

(Excerpt) To what end has the OAS been delaying a solution which can be no other than a simple police action that should be entrusted to the country's regular armed forces? To what end? The answer to that question involves many conjectures. It is possible that the OAS is prolonging the Dominican crisis until the foreign ministers' meeting that is to have as main topic a reorganization of the regional organization and the creation of a permanent Inter-American Peace Force. In that case, the intervention in the Dominican Republic can be displayed as a system of imposition of peace by force; it will be the strongest factor for final creation of an Inter-American Peace Force.

It might also be that a settlement is being postponed for the deliberate purpose of encouraging uprisings in the interior, to bring to light communists not yet listed by the FBI or the CIA, and justify occupation of the entire country by the Inter-American Peace Force, 95 percent of which is made up of North American troops and which includes just four countries of the continent.
